

Strategic Plan for Pulse: Marketing Reach & Content Strategy

Marketing Reach Plan (Global, High-Touch Focus)

Pulse will employ a global outreach strategy with a high-touch enterprise focus, meaning we combine broad thought leadership presence with highly personalized engagement. Below we outline key channels and tactics to reach each target segment, followed by cross-segment strategies for partnerships and personalized outreach.

Investment Firms (Private Equity & Venture Capital)

- Industry Media & Newsletters: Engage PE/VC professionals through respected industry publications and newsletters. For example, Private Equity International (PEI) offers global private equity news focused on the LP/GP community <sup>1</sup>, and PE Hub provides deal-making intelligence in North America & Europe <sup>2</sup>. Contribute guest articles or insights to these outlets. Leverage VC-focused newsletters like StrictlyVC and PitchBook's daily "Private Equity" briefs (PitchBook's Daily Pitch has editions for PE, VC, M&A) <sup>3</sup> to reach investors with relevant content and ads.
- Events & Conferences: Establish presence at elite industry events. For instance, SuperReturn (North America, Asia, International) is a top-tier conference series drawing hundreds of senior PE/VC executives <sup>4</sup>. Sponsoring or speaking at SuperReturn (or regional PE conferences) raises Pulse's profile. Attend other high-impact events like Private Equity Insights (regional conferences) and VC forums (e.g. TechCrunch Disrupt for VCs) to network with deal-makers.
- Communities & Networks: Participate in networks where investors gather. Join associations like the Association for Corporate Growth (ACG), which connects PE, corporate development, and M&A professionals. Engage on LinkedIn Groups and forums dedicated to M&A and private markets. Many investors also follow finance thought leaders on LinkedIn – Pulse's executives can post analysis on recent M&A trends to spark connections.
- Industry Advisors & Referrals: Leverage relationships with seasoned industry advisors. Enlist former PE partners or VC firm advisors on Pulse's advisory board to open doors. Their endorsement can facilitate warm introductions to their networks of fund managers and investment professionals. Encourage referrals by providing stellar service to initial PE/VC clients and asking them to recommend Pulse within their circles (a common practice in tight-knit PE networks).

B2B Companies (Lead Generation & Market Intelligence)

- Digital Communities & Blogs: Reach B2B marketing and sales teams through channels they trust for lead generation insights. Contribute thought leadership to B2B marketing blogs (e.g. HubSpot, Demand Gen Report) on topics like building targeted company lists or market analysis. Guest posts or interviews on sales enablement podcasts can also highlight Pulse's expertise.
- LinkedIn Targeting & Ads: Use LinkedIn's ability to target professionals by role/industry for advertising Pulse's services. Target job titles like Sales Operations Manager, Marketing Director, or Competitive Intelligence Analyst with content about accelerating lead pipeline and market research. Also, share Pulse's own LinkedIn content (industry trend posts, infographics) to organically reach these professionals – LinkedIn is a top platform for B2B engagement globally.

- Newsletters & Email Outreach: Identify popular newsletters read by B2B professionals (for example, newsletters focused on sales intelligence or industry-specific roundups) and explore sponsorship or content partnerships. Pulse can sponsor sections in newsletters where its target roles are likely readers (e.g. a manufacturing industry newsletter for B2B companies in that sector). In parallel, build an opt-in email list by offering valuable content (like a “Top 100 Companies in X Industry” report) and use it for nurturing campaigns.
- Trade Shows & Industry Events: Many B2B companies attend trade shows or conferences specific to their sector (e.g. a healthcare technology expo) – Pulse can partner with or attend such events to meet business development and strategy teams. Also consider B2B marketing conferences (like B2B Marketing Exchange) where Pulse could present a session on data-driven market intelligence, thus directly reaching corporate marketers.
- Partnerships: Form strategic partnerships with tools that B2B firms already use for sales intelligence. For example, integration or co-marketing with CRM platforms or data providers (if feasible) can put Pulse in front of B2B users searching for company data. Similarly, partnering with regional business chambers or trade associations to offer Pulse's insights to their member companies (perhaps via webinars or joint whitepapers) can expand reach with implied endorsement.

Consultants (M&A Advisors and Strategy Consultants)

- Networks & Associations: Connect with management consulting networks and professional bodies. For instance, engage with the Institute of Management Consultants or regional consulting clubs. These organizations often hold events or webinars – Pulse can sponsor such events or contribute content (e.g. a talk on efficient market scanning for due diligence).
- Consulting Publications: Publish content in venues consultants read to support client work. This could include writing an article for Consulting Magazine or an op-ed in Harvard Business Review focused on using data to drive M&A strategy (consultants frequently consume HBR content for ideas). By placing thought leadership where partners and analysts are reading, Pulse gains credibility as an expert resource.
- Targeted Outreach & ABM: Use account-based marketing to identify top consulting firms (large and boutique) that advise on M&A or market entry, and tailor outreach. For a large firm (e.g. Big 4 or a strategy firm), create a custom brief highlighting how Pulse's quick-turnaround lists can support their project teams. Include personalized messages referencing the firm's recent deals or industries of focus. Because consultants highly value practical solutions, a personalized case (like “Pulse helped a consulting team deliver on a tight deadline for a market scan”) can grab attention.
- Events & Conferences: Attend or sponsor conferences that consultants attend for insights. For example, industry-specific conferences (like a Healthcare Innovation Summit) often have consulting attendees; having a presence or workshop there (tailored to “opportunity mapping in healthcare,” for instance) can indirectly reach consultants. Additionally, events like Gartner's symposiums (which some consulting strategists attend) could be channels to meet and network.
- Advisor Relationships: Similar to the PE strategy, engage ex-consulting partners or senior advisors who can champion Pulse. They can introduce Pulse to their former firms or colleagues. Consultants rely heavily on trusted recommendations, so an introduction from a respected former partner can be a powerful endorsement.

Market Research & Business Intelligence Firms

- Industry Communities & Events: Be visible where market research professionals gather. ESOMAR (global market research association) hosts an annual Congress and regional events <sup>5</sup> – Pulse can attend, network, or even present a paper/case study there to demonstrate thought leadership in research. Likewise, sponsor or speak at The Quirk's Event, a conference series for marketing research & insights professionals <sup>6</sup>. These events put Pulse in front of research agency leaders and analysts looking for data sources.
- Research Industry Publications: Contribute to trade publications and platforms. For example, publish articles or case studies on GreenBook Blog or Quirks.com about efficient ways to compile company lists or analyze niche markets. Being featured in such outlets positions Pulse as an innovative player in the research field.
- Partnerships with BI Firms: Pursue partnerships where Pulse acts as a backend data provider for market research firms. Many boutique research and intelligence firms might lack deep data gathering capacity – offer them a partnership or white-label service. Jointly publishing a study (e.g. “Top Emerging Companies in [Sector] – A report by [BI Firm] with data from Pulse”) can give Pulse exposure to the BI firm's clients while enhancing the firm's offerings.
- Online Forums & Communities: Engage on platforms like Quora or specialized forums where researchers seek advice on finding data. Providing expert answers (e.g. “How to identify all Tier-3 suppliers in automotive”) can softly promote Pulse's capabilities. Also participate in LinkedIn groups for market research professionals, sharing tips and Pulse's content.
- High-Touch Outreach: Use a consultative sales approach for BI firms – identify target companies and reach out with a tailored message. For instance, recognizing that a market intelligence firm specializes in telecom, Pulse can reach out offering a “telecom companies expansion list” sample that showcases how Pulse could support their projects.

Supply Chain Management Companies (Tier 2/3 Supplier Focus)

- Specialized Media & Blogs: Contribute content to supply chain and procurement publications. For example, SupplyChainBrain offers comprehensive coverage and case studies for supply chain professionals <sup>7</sup>, and Supply Chain Management Review provides expert insights in the field <sup>8</sup>. Writing an article or success story in these outlets (e.g. “How to Discover Tier-2 Suppliers in Emerging Markets”) will reach sourcing managers in need of such solutions.
- Newsletters & Briefings: Tap into popular industry newsletters. Supply Chain Dive and Supply Chain Digest are widely read for news and trends. Sponsoring a section or contributing an expert column (e.g. a brief on mitigating supplier risk) can put Pulse in front of thousands of supply chain professionals. Even Gartner's Supply Chain e-newsletter is a channel to explore for thought leadership placement <sup>9</sup>.
- Conferences & Trade Shows: Participate in marquee supply chain events. Key examples include the CSCMP EDGE conference (run by the Council of Supply Chain Management Professionals) <sup>10</sup> and procurement-focused events like ISM (Institute for Supply Management) Annual Conference. Pulse can host a booth or workshop demonstrating how quickly it can map out a supply base. Additionally, niche manufacturing trade shows (by industry, e.g. aerospace supply chain forum) allow targeting of Tier-2/Tier-3 supplier hunters – consider sponsoring or speaking on panels about supplier discovery.
- Communities & Networks: Join and contribute to online and offline communities of supply chain experts. This includes procurement forums, LinkedIn groups like “Procurement Professionals” or “Supply Chain Innovations,” and regional supply chain chapters. Providing useful insights or data (for example, a mini-report on “New manufacturing hubs in Asia” shared in a group) can generate interest and inbound inquiries.

- Industry Advisors: Onboard advisors from the supply chain domain – e.g., a former Chief Procurement Officer or Supply Chain VP known in the industry. Their network and credibility can help Pulse get introduced to companies that manage complex supplier networks. They can also co-host roundtables with Pulse for supply chain leaders, positioning Pulse through an authoritative voice.

Cross-Segment Enterprise Outreach Strategies

In addition to segment-specific channels, Pulse will implement several cross-segment tactics to ensure a high-touch approach for enterprise clients:

- Account-Based Marketing (ABM): We will identify a set of high-value target accounts in each segment and pursue them with coordinated marketing-sales efforts. This means tailored messaging and content for each account (e.g. a customized landing page or info pack addressing that account’s specific needs). ABM is proven to yield bigger deals and stronger pipelines – for instance, companies with aligned ABM strategies saw a 208% increase in revenue and 84% report pipeline growth from ABM efforts <sup>11</sup> <sup>12</sup>. We will invest in these personalized campaigns to convert marquee clients.
- Personalized Outreach & Relationship Marketing: All outreach will be personalized and consultative rather than generic. Using insights about each prospect, Pulse representatives will reach out via LinkedIn messages, emails, and calls referencing the prospect’s context (such as their portfolio or industry focus). Notably, 42% of B2B marketers are already personalizing content to boost engagement and build long-term relationships <sup>13</sup> – Pulse will do the same by customizing emails with relevant data tidbits or industry insights for each prospect. The tone will be that of a helpful expert partner, not a mass sales pitch.
- Thought Leadership & PR Placements: Build Pulse’s reputation by placing thought leadership content in prominent channels across industries. This includes publishing bylined articles, appearing on podcasts, and getting quoted in industry news. High-quality thought leadership is especially powerful in B2B: 75% of decision-makers (including C-suite) say that good thought leadership content prompted them to consider a product/service they weren’t initially looking at <sup>14</sup>. For example, Pulse might publish an op-ed in a financial times or an industry journal on “Hidden Champions: The Power of Tier-3 Suppliers,” which could attract any of the target segments via press pickup. Such content will reinforce credibility when we approach enterprise clients.
- Strategic Partnerships & Sponsorships: Form partnerships that increase Pulse’s visibility and trust. For example, partner with an industry advisor network (who can bundle Pulse’s lists as part of their consulting) or a data platform that complements Pulse’s service. Sponsorships are another key – whether it’s sponsoring a segment-specific event (e.g. a Private Equity networking dinner or a Supply Chain webinar series) or an online community, these efforts put Pulse’s brand in front of the right people. We will select sponsorships with high executive attendance and, where possible, include speaking opportunities to showcase expertise.
- Advisor & Influencer Engagement: We will cultivate a network of industry advisors/influencers who can amplify our reach. This includes the advisors mentioned per segment, as well as industry analysts or bloggers who cover relevant beats (PE, supply chain, etc.). By briefing them on Pulse’s capabilities and success stories, we aim to have them mention Pulse in their own content or recommend us when their clients/readers have a need. This word-of-mouth channel is invaluable for enterprise services.
- High-Touch Follow-Up: Finally, ensure every lead or prospect from any channel gets high-touch treatment. For example, after an event or content download, a Pulse expert will follow up individually

(not just with generic emails), offering to discuss the prospect's specific use case. This white-glove approach signals the "expert handling" that is a Pulse hallmark and helps move engagements forward.

Content Creation Plan (Consultative, Expert-Driven Tone)

Pulse's content strategy will establish us as a consultative expert in company research, attracting inbound interest and supporting outbound sales. We will deploy two complementary approaches:

- Inbound content to draw in and educate prospects (SEO, blog, LinkedIn content, whitepapers, webinars, etc.), and
- Outbound content to target specific accounts and enable the sales team (account-specific materials, sales decks, tailored collateral).

All content will maintain a helpful, data-driven tone – addressing client challenges and demonstrating Pulse's expertise, rather than pushing a hard sell. Below is a detailed plan for both inbound and outbound content, followed by recommended formats, distribution tactics, and alignment of content to buyer roles/funnel stages.

Inbound Content Strategy (Attract & Educate)

Goal: Position Pulse as a thought leader and trusted resource so that potential clients discover and engage with us organically. Inbound content will focus on SEO optimization, social sharing, and lead capture. Key components:

- SEO-Optimized Blog Posts: Develop a robust blog on Pulse's website featuring articles that answer the exact questions our target audiences might search. For example: "How to Find Acquisition Targets in [Industry]" (targeting investment firms), "Top 50 [Sector] Companies in [Region]" (useful for B2B lead gen), or "Guide to Mapping Tier-2 Suppliers" (for supply chain managers). These posts will be rich with insights and keywords, helping Pulse rank on search engines. (While SEO is evolving, 63% of B2B buyers still include internet search in their vendor research <sup>15</sup>, so being discoverable is crucial.) We will update content regularly and use technical SEO best practices (fast load, schema, etc.) to capture high-intent traffic.
- Thought Leadership Articles & Whitepapers: Create deeper content pieces like whitepapers, e-books, or reports that provide consultative advice. For inbound, topics could include an industry landscape report (e.g. "Pulse Report: Emerging Tech Startups in 2025") or how-to guides (e.g. "M&A Due Diligence Checklist – Powered by Data"). These will be downloadable (some gated behind a lead form to capture contacts, with careful consideration given that only ~48% of buyers are very willing to share email for content <sup>16</sup>). By offering a mix of gated and ungated assets (e.g. executive summary ungated, full report gated), we balance lead generation with reaching a wider audience.
- LinkedIn and Social Content: Leverage LinkedIn as the primary social channel for Pulse's content distribution. Regularly post bite-sized insights drawn from our research – for instance, a statistic from a Pulse project ("75% of attractive bolt-on targets in Sector X are under-the-radar mid-market firms") with a visual. Also, publish longer-form LinkedIn articles by Pulse leadership (e.g. CEO or Head of Research) on topics like market entry strategy or supply chain resilience, reinforcing the expert persona. LinkedIn is where professionals across our segments spend time daily; by sharing valuable content consistently, we stay on their radar. Twitter (X) can be used in a limited way to share insights and reach journalists or certain influencer circles, but LinkedIn will be primary for B2B.

- Webinars & Virtual Events: Host webinars, roundtables, or AMA sessions to showcase Pulse's expertise live. For example: a webinar for PE firms on "Accelerating Your Deal Sourcing – Best Practices and Tools," or a joint webinar with a supply chain association on "Building a Resilient Supplier Network." These events allow interactive education, positioning Pulse experts as advisors. We will promote webinars via LinkedIn, email invites, and partners (e.g. invite the members of an association we partner with). Webinar recordings will be repurposed as on-demand videos on our site and YouTube for continued inbound traffic.
- Gated Tools or Interactive Content: Develop interactive content such as a "Target List Generator" or ROI calculator on the website. For instance, a simple tool where a PE associate can input criteria and get a teaser list count (then prompted to contact Pulse for the full list) can both engage and convert visitors. Interactive content not only improves time-on-site but also yields data (via sign-ups or usage insights) that informs our sales approach.
- Inbound Lead Nurturing: When inbound leads do give us their info (through gated downloads or webinar sign-ups), we'll nurture them with an automated but personalized email sequence. This sequence will deliver additional content of value: e.g. a follow-up email with a case study relevant to what they downloaded, or an invitation to an upcoming event. The tone remains consultative ("we thought you might find this resource useful..."). The nurturing track will vary by segment – a lead identified as a VC will get different follow-up content (like "Top 10 Startup Markets to Watch") than a lead identified as a supply chain manager (who might get a "Supplier Risk Checklist"). This segmentation ensures relevance at every touch.

Outbound Content Strategy (Targeted & Sales-Enablement)

Goal: Equip the sales/account team with compelling content to open doors and close deals, and deliver highly customized information to target accounts. Outbound content will often be one-to-one or one-to-few, aligning with our ABM approach. Key components:

- Account-Specific Insight Briefs: For each top-tier target account (or account cluster), create a short "Pulse Insight Brief." This 2-3 page document will be tailored to the prospect, using publicly available information and Pulse's know-how. For example, for a specific private equity firm, the brief might outline "5 potential bolt-on acquisitions that fit your portfolio thesis" (without giving the full list, but enough to intrigue). For a supply chain company, it might show "Analysis of your supply base concentration and 3 alternative suppliers you're not using yet." This teaser content demonstrates Pulse's capability on the prospect's own problem, providing immediate value and a strong reason to engage with our team for the full solution.
- Customized Sales Decks: Develop a master Pulse sales deck that can be modularly customized by segment and even by client. The deck will have sections of general Pulse value (our service, team, process, 3-day turnaround, etc.) and interchangeable sections with case studies or examples relevant to each segment. Sales reps or marketers can quickly tailor it: e.g., inserting the "Consulting use-case" slides and a consulting client logo when pitching to a consulting firm, versus using the "Private Equity use-case" slides for PE prospects. This ensures every outbound presentation feels industry-specific and client-relevant.
- Case Study Library for Sales: Maintain a library of one-page case studies and success snippets categorized by segment. Each case study will follow a simple format (Client type, their challenge, how Pulse delivered, and results). For outbound, salespeople will choose the most relevant case study to include in an email or packet to a prospect (e.g., send the "Market Expansion – B2B Tech" case to a tech company, or the “Due Diligence Targets – PE Firm” case to a PE prospect). These stories provide proof and are extremely powerful in convincing skeptical prospects – indeed, real-world examples are often cited by decision-makers as influential in vendor selection <sup>17</sup> .

- ROI Calculations & Value Justification: Create ROI narrative documents that help quantify Pulse’s value for the economic buyer. This could be a slide or one-pager showing, for example, “Using Pulse vs. Internal Research: 3x faster, saving ~50 hours of analyst time, which equals $X cost saving, plus opportunity cost of faster deal-making.” We will gather data from initial projects to populate these assumptions (e.g., if one client saved 2 weeks of research time, quantify that). These ROI sheets will be customized per prospect if possible (using any info we have on their typical costs or goals) and included in later-stage discussions. By giving hard numbers and ROI stories, we cater to the C-suite and finance stakeholders in the decision. (In fact, providing content that speaks to specific pain points and metrics is vital – 59% of buyers say they want content that specifically addresses their pain points with solutions <sup>18</sup> .)
- Sales Email Sequences & Templates: Develop a set of outbound email templates for different sequences (cold outreach, follow-up after initial contact, etc.), each loaded with valuable content. For instance, a first-touch email might include a link to a relevant blog post or infographic (“Hi, we prepared a brief analysis on [prospect’s industry] – I thought you’d find an insight on emerging players useful.”). A follow-up email might attach a mini case study PDF. The key is each touch in the outbound sequence provides value (not just “checking in”). Marketing will provide these content-rich templates to ensure consistency and quality, and sales can personalize them further.
- Microsite or Custom Landing Pages: For certain high-value prospects or campaigns, create custom landing pages that speak directly to the segment or account. For example, a landing page “Pulse for Healthcare Acquisitions” which we direct healthcare-focused PE firms to, containing tailored messaging, relevant case studies, and maybe a short video from our team addressing them. For ABM accounts, even use their logo (with permission) or reference on a private page (“Welcome [Company Name] Team – here’s how Pulse can help you...”). This level of personalization in content delivery can make Pulse stand out and demonstrate we truly understand the prospect’s world.
- Physical/Printed Collateral: While digital is primary, for high-touch outreach we won’t overlook physical content. For instance, sending a printed brief or infographic via mail to an ultra high-value prospect could cut through email clutter. A beautifully bound booklet of “Top 20 prospects in your target market – compiled by Pulse” mailed to a PE firm’s partners, or a small printed “Pulse Portfolio” of case studies for a consultant, can leave a tangible impression. These will be used selectively (given cost) for key accounts or as leave-behinds after meetings.

Key Content Formats and Distribution Channels

We will use a variety of content formats to engage our audience, each serving different purposes. Importantly, we’ll distribute each format across the optimal channels to reach our segments. Below is a summary of the core formats, with their intended use and distribution:

| Content Format          | Purpose & Use                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | Primary Distribution Channels                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|-------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Case Studies     | Demonstrate Pulse's value through real-world success stories. Each case study highlights a client scenario, our solution, and tangible results (e.g. "PE Firm X sourced 5 acquisitions using Pulse"). Builds credibility and trust via proof.                                                                                                                                                          | Website – Company blog or a dedicated case study page (for inbound visitors); Sales Collateral – as PDF one-pagers sent via email to prospects or handed out in meetings; LinkedIn – share snippets or client quotes as posts; Industry Media – pitch condensed case studies to journals or blogs in that segment.                                                                    |
| Data Teardowns   | Showcase Pulse's analytical expertise with deep-dives into data. For example, a blog series "Pulse Data Teardown" could analyze an industry's M&A trends or compare the footprint of Tier-2 vs Tier-1 suppliers. These pieces provide thought leadership and often include graphics or charts.                                                                                                         | Company Blog – as flagship content attracting SEO traffic and shares; LinkedIn Articles – repost or summarize the teardown for professional audience; Third-Party Platforms – contribute these analyses to industry sites or newsletters (e.g. a teardown of "industrial manufacturing landscape" to a manufacturing magazine); Webinars – use findings as talking points or visuals. |
| ROI Narratives   | Quantify and narrate the return on investment or time savings of Pulse. Often formatted as short case examples or hypothetical scenarios ("By using Pulse, Company Y saved 100 hours and identified 3 extra targets, leading to a 10% higher deal pipeline"). These help convince economic buyers by speaking to value and outcomes.                                                                   | Sales Documents – included in proposals and business cases for prospects; Website/Blog – a post or infographic on "The ROI of Curated Company Lists" for inbound interest; Email Newsletters – feature a "Did you know?" section highlighting ROI stats; LinkedIn – infographics or slides (Carousel posts) illustrating ROI figures to catch executives' attention.                  |
| Explainer Videos | Offer a quick, engaging overview of Pulse's service and process. A 2-minute animated or live-action explainer can show how Pulse works (from request to delivery) and the benefits (expert handling, fast 3-day turnaround, tailored lists). Great for those who prefer visual learning. (Note: ~50% of B2B buyers now prefer video content over text for info <sup>19</sup> , so this format is key.) | Website – embed on the homepage and a "How Pulse Works" page for new visitors; YouTube Channel – to host and enable easy sharing/SEO on Google; LinkedIn – upload natively as a post, since LinkedIn favors video content (use captions for auto-play); Sales Meetings/Events – play the video on a screen at booths or at the start of a pitch to set context.                       |

| Content Format                  | Purpose & Use                                                                                                                                                                                              | Primary Distribution Channels                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|---------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Whitepapers &amp; Guides | Provide in-depth, authoritative content on topics of interest (e.g. "Comprehensive Guide to Market Mapping for Private Equity"). Establish expertise and often used for lead generation (gated downloads). | Website – landing page with summary and download form (gated) for lead capture; Email Campaigns – send to existing leads as a nurturing piece ("download our latest guide"); LinkedIn – promote via posts or even LinkedIn Sponsored Content targeting relevant roles; Third-party Promotions – possibly through industry portals or newsletters that allow sharing of free whitepapers to their audience. |
| Webinar Recordings       | Extend the life of our webinars by offering them on-demand. A recorded webinar becomes rich content that can keep generating leads (when gated) or engagement.                                             | Website – Resource library with on-demand webinars (could require sign-up to view, to capture leads); YouTube – host recordings for broader access (and embed on site); Follow-up Emails – send the recording link to those who registered or to new prospects who might find the topic relevant; Social Media – share short highlights or clips on LinkedIn to drive interest in the full recording.      |

In practice, we will repurpose content across channels. For example, insights from a data teardown blog can be turned into a short SlideShare, and key stats from a whitepaper can become an infographic on LinkedIn. This cross-pollination ensures we meet our audience on their channel of choice while maintaining consistent messaging.

Inbound vs. Outbound Content Distribution

To clarify how we'll distribute content for inbound vs outbound purposes, here's how various formats map out:

- Inbound Distribution: Company Blog & SEO (for articles, teardowns), Social Media (LinkedIn posts, YouTube for videos), Industry Publications (guest articles, press releases for thought leadership pieces), Webinars (live events drawing sign-ups), and Email Newsletters (regular updates to subscribers with recent blogs, upcoming webinars, etc.). These channels attract and educate broadly, feeding the top of the funnel.
- Outbound Distribution: Direct Email to Target Accounts (leveraging case studies, briefs, and ROI docs as attachments or links), One-on-One LinkedIn Outreach (sharing relevant content in messages to prospects), Sales Meetings (using decks, printed collateral, videos in live presentations), and Account-Specific Landing Pages (hosting tailored content for key prospects to visit). These methods are aimed at moving specific accounts down the funnel.

We will ensure that for every piece of content created, there's a plan for where it will live and how it reaches the intended audience. For example, a single case study might live on our website (inbound use), be excerpted in a LinkedIn post (social reach), and be attached in a personal email to a prospect (outbound use).

Aligning Content to Buyer Roles and Funnel Stages

Different client types involve different decision-maker roles and buying journeys. Pulse's content strategy will align with both who we are talking to (their role) and where they are in the decision process. The table below outlines how we will target content for each segment's typical roles across the sales funnel:

| Client Segment                                      | Key Decision-Maker Roles                                                                                                      | Awareness Stage Content (Top-of-Funnel)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | Consideration Stage Content (Mid-Funnel)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | Decision Stage Content (Bottom-of-Funnel)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Investment Firms (PE, VC, other Buyside) | - Associates/ Analysts (researchers sourcing deals) - Partners/ Principals (investment decision-makers) | Thought Leadership Blogs &amp; Reports – e.g. an article on “Emerging Opportunities in [Sector]” or a report on industry consolidation trends. These attract associates via SEO and LinkedIn, showcasing Pulse's insight into deal sourcing. <sup>14</sup> For partners, high-level pieces in outlets like PE Hub or an op-ed in a finance magazine build awareness of Pulse's expertise. | Case Studies &amp; Sample Lists – e.g. a case study: “How Pulse helped a PE firm identify 50 targets in 72 hours.” Associates will delve into methodology and results here, evaluating Pulse's fit. We might also provide a sample target list (sanitized) for their sector to demonstrate the depth and quality, possibly through a private microsite or one-on-one demo. This content nurtures the buying committee by proving Pulse can deliver on their use-case. | Customized Proposals &amp; ROI Justification – Partners and principals at the decision stage get content focusing on outcomes and assurance. This includes a custom proposal outlining exactly what we'll deliver (tailored to their mandate), along with an ROI narrative highlighting time saved, faster deal closing, etc. We'll also offer reference calls or quotes from similar clients (since hearing peer success can clinch decisions). The goal is content that reduces perceived risk and shows Pulse as a proven partner. |

| Client Segment                                                                    | Key Decision-Maker Roles                                                                                                                                | Awareness Stage Content (Top-of-Funnel)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    | Consideration Stage Content (Mid-Funnel)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               | Decision Stage Content (Bottom-of-Funnel)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| B2B Companies(Market Intelligence, Lead Gen, Competitive Analysis) | - Marketing &amp; Sales Managers(users seeking leads/intel) - Directors/VPs or CMO(decision-makers signing off on budget) | Educational Content &amp; SEO Assets – e.g. blog posts like “How to build a B2B lead list for [Industry]” or “Benchmarking your market share in X region.” These draw in managers via Google and help them learn new approaches (with Pulse subtly introduced as a solution). Infographics on LinkedIn about market trends also build awareness among both managers and execs scrolling their feed. | Webinars, How-to Guides &amp; Use-Case Articles – At this stage, a Marketing Manager might attend a webinar on improving lead generation (where we demonstrate Pulse via a tutorial), or download a how-to guide on competitive intelligence. We’ll also share relevant case studies (e.g. how a similar B2B company used Pulse to break into a new market) that the manager can internally champion. This content helps the internal advocate make the case up the chain. | Executive Briefs &amp; Pilot Results – For the CMO or VP evaluating the purchase, we provide an executive brief summarizing why Pulse is the best choice (business benefits, security, support). A ROI calculator or report tailored to their scenario (e.g. cost of Pulse vs hiring a research team) will be included. Often, B2B buyers might want to “try before buy,” so we can share pilot project results – if we did a small test or provided a sample list, we’ll package the outcome (number of good leads found, etc.) as decision-stage proof. The content here is all about giving decision-makers confidence in measurable outcomes. |

| Client Segment                                                                 | Key Decision-Maker Roles                                                                                                                                                                           | Awareness Stage Content (Top-of-Funnel)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    | Consideration Stage Content (Mid-Funnel)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | Decision Stage Content (Bottom-of-Funnel)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Consulting Firms(Strategy, M&A Advisory, Due Diligence Support) | - Engagement Managers/ Consultants(day-to-day users gathering data for client projects)  - Partners/ Practice Leaders(senior buyers concerned with quality & reputation) | Insight Pieces &amp; Credibility Content– To get on a consultant’s radar, we share insights they can use . For example, a Pulse whitepaper “Global Market Snapshot: [Industry] Q3 2025” that consultants might cite in a client deck. Posting such resources on consulting forums or LinkedIn gets mid-level consultants aware of Pulse. Also, content in publications like HBR or trade journals (discussing efficient research methods) can indirectly reach partners by building our credibility as research experts. | Tailored Case Studies &amp; Methodology Explainer – Consultants in consideration will want to vet Pulse’s reliability. We provide a case study of a consulting firm (or similar use) where Pulse delivered under tight timeline – this resonates strongly if it mirrors their needs. Additionally, a methodology brief (outlining our data sources, vetting process, quality assurance) can be shared with both engagement managers and partners to address quality concerns. This stage might also include offering a small trial (e.g. “give us one niche to research”) – the results of which serve as content themselves to prove our capability. | Proposal and Reference Deck – Partners making the final call will receive a very custom proposal framing Pulse as an extension of their team (emphasizing confidentiality, quality and how we make them look good to their clients). We’ll include a short “references and credentials” deck – essentially content about our team’s expertise, past consulting clients, and maybe anonymized examples of work – to satisfy the partner’s need for assurance (consulting firms are risk-averse and care about their reputation). At this stage, offering to hop on a call with a reference from a respected consulting peer is powerful content in spoken form – it’s essentially a testimonial geared to final sign-off. |

---

Market Research & BI Firms
(Research
agencies, Intelligence providers)

- Research Analysts (users who would interact with Pulse data)  - Research
Directors/Owners (decision-makers concerned with quality & efficiency)

Thought Leadership on Research Best Practices – We share content that speaks to researchers’
interests: e.g. an article “Achieving 100% coverage in market mapping”
or a conference presentation on new techniques
for identifying emerging players.
Analysts
consuming this in places like GreenBook or Quirk’s gain awareness of Pulse as innovating in data collection. For research
directors, seeing Pulse mentioned alongside industry best practices (or reading an interview with Pulse’s CEO on quality data gathering) builds
top-of-funnel
awareness that Pulse is on the cutting edge.

*Deep Demos, Sample Data &
Validation Content* –
When a research firm is considering Pulse, content
should prove our data quality. This includes providing sample data sets (e.g. “Here are 20
sample entries
from a Pulse company list in your domain”) for their analysts to review. We may also produce a validation study –
for instance, a short report where we compare Pulse’s
list to a known
database to show
completeness.
Additionally, case studies focusing on research firm use (like “BI Firm
improves project
turnaround by 30%
with Pulse”) help
the director
envision
integration.
Analysts might want to see process
documentation, so
sharing a sanitized
process flow or FAQ doc about how we gather and
verify data is useful content at this stage.

Integration Plan & SLA Documents –
Final-stage content
for BI firms will revolve around how it works in practice and risk mitigation. We’ll present an integration plan
document showing how Pulse can slot
into their existing workflow (for example, how requests will be handled, data
formats, any API or
portal if applicable, etc.). We’ll also provide service
level agreement
(SLA) details,
confidentiality
assurances, and references as documents.
Essentially, we address any remaining concerns
about reliability and support. The decision-makers (often owners or senior directors)
will see a clear plan
and commitment in writing. Combined with likely a pilot project review (if we did a pilot list for them), this content
gives the green
light confidence.

---

Supply Chain & Procurement (Companies managing supplier networks)

- Procurement/Sourcing Managers (users looking up suppliers)
- Supply Chain Directors/VPs (decision-makers focused on risk and cost)

Problem-Solution Content & Industry Stories – At awareness, we put out content highlighting industry problems (and hinting at solutions). For example, a blog post “The Hidden Risk of Tier-3 Supplier Gaps” or a story on LinkedIn about a recent supply chain disruption, coupled with data on how proactive supplier search can help. This draws in managers who encounter these issues daily. We also aim for coverage in supply chain newsletters <sup>7</sup> or podcasts – e.g. Pulse’s commentary on supplier diversity on a podcast – to raise awareness among both managers and execs that such a solution exists.

Case Study & Webinar (Practical How-To) – Mid-funnel, a case study like “How Manufacturer Y expanded its supplier base with Pulse in 3 weeks” will speak directly to managers’ needs and give directors tangible evidence. We’ll also run a practical webinar, say “How to Quickly Identify Alternate Suppliers (Tips from Pulse’s experts)” – managers attend to learn tactics, and we subtly demonstrate Pulse in action. The director might not attend, but the manager can share the recording or learnings internally, furthering consideration. Additionally, we could offer a small pilot list (e.g. offer to find 5 suppliers in a category they struggle with) – the content deliverable from that pilot (the mini-report of those 5 suppliers) serves as compelling mid-funnel content to discuss internally.

Detailed Proposal & Risk Mitigation Brief – At decision time, supply chain VPs will focus on risk, accuracy, and ROI. We present a detailed proposal outlining exactly how Pulse will find and vet suppliers, including quality checks we do (to satisfy risk concerns). A “risk mitigation brief” could be content we prepare that explains how using Pulse reduces various risks (e.g. avoiding sole-supplier risk by identifying new suppliers, with a cost-benefit analysis of having backups). We’ll include references or testimonials from similar clients about data accuracy. Also, a cost comparison sheet – e.g., cost of Pulse vs cost of deploying internal resources or consultants to do the same – will be important for the VP/CFO evaluation. At this stage, our content and conversations will highlight Pulse’s 3-day turnaround

| Client Segment | Key Decision-Maker Roles | Awareness Stage Content (Top-of-Funnel) | Consideration Stage Content (Mid-Funnel) | Decision Stage Content (Bottom-of-Funnel)                                                                        |
|----------------|--------------------------|-----------------------------------------|------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|                |                          |                                         |                                          | advantage as a way to respond rapidly to supply needs, a decisive factor we want to imprint in the buyer's mind. |

Why this alignment matters: It ensures that each stakeholder finds what they need to move forward. Top-of-funnel thought leadership builds initial trust and credibility (notably, quality thought leadership makes 86% of decision-makers more likely to consider a vendor for an RFP <sup>20</sup> ). Mid-funnel educational and case content allows evaluators to imagine using Pulse and reduces doubts. Bottom-funnel, the focus is on validation, ROI, and risk – content here ensures the economic buyer and influencer are comfortable that choosing Pulse is a smart, safe decision.

By carefully matching content to roles and funnel stages, Pulse will guide prospects through a consultative journey: from first discovering us as an insightful voice in the industry, to seeing evidence of our value, to finally feeling confident enough (in both head and heart) to become a customer. Each piece of content acts as a stepping stone toward that ultimate conversion, aligned with how enterprise decisions are actually made.

<sup>1</sup> Private Equity International | PEI | Global private equity news ...

<https://www.privateequityinternational.com/>

<sup>2</sup> PE Hub | Access our latest deal news and insights now

<https://www.pehub.com/>

<sup>3</sup> The Best Venture Capital & Private Equity Newsletters and Podcasts | Leland

<https://www.joinleland.com/library/a/top-vc-pe-newsletters-and-podcasts>

<sup>4</sup> Top 13 Private Equity Conferences to Attend in 2025

<https://www.sourcecodeals.com/blog/best-private-equity-conferences>

<sup>5</sup> ESOMAR Congress 2025 | Events - Quirk's

<https://www.quirks.com/events/esomar-congress-2025>

<sup>6</sup> The Quirks Event - For Marketing Research & Insights Professionals

<https://thequirksevent.com/>

<sup>7</sup> <sup>8</sup> <sup>9</sup> Top 10 Supply Chain Newsletters for Inspiration

<https://flodesk.com/tips/supply-chain-newsletters>

<sup>10</sup> CSCMP

<https://cscmp.org/>

<sup>11</sup> <sup>12</sup> <sup>13</sup> 60+ Account-Based Marketing Statistics for 2025

<https://learn.g2.com/account-based-marketing-statistics>

14 17 20 Edelman and LinkedIn report: How thought leadership impacts prospects and customers - Ragan Communications

<https://www.ragan.com/edelman-and-linkedin-report-thought-leadership/>

15 16 18 19 The State of B2B Buyer Preferences in 2024: The Great Content Marketing Disconnect - Scribewise

<https://scribewise.com/2024-content-marketing-report-disconnect/>